Step-by-Step Guide: Responding to Identity Theft with Legal Letters

NEW: Identity theft victims can now go get a free, custom identity theft recovery plan through the Federal Trade Commission's IdentityTheft.gov website.

The new one-stop website works with the FTC's consumer complaint system, allowing consumers who are victims of identity theft to quickly file a complaint with the FTC. Then they can get a custom guide to recovery that helps simplify many of the steps involved.

- The upgraded site is mobile and tablet friendly.
- It offers easy-to-use tools to help identity theft victims create the documents they need to alert police, the main credit bureaus, the IRS and others.

Kansas Legal Services also offers help in creating letters to send to major creditors and reporting agencies, please read below.

What is Identity Theft?

Identity Theft is the largest consumer complaint filed with the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) annually. If you have been the victim of identity theft, it could mean someone has used your name to:

- make purchases,
- get credit cards
- rent an apartment or
- obtain utilities without your permission.

In some cases, thieves may have received medical services in your name, re-routed your tax refund, or even posed as you during contact with law enforcement.

Identity theft may also include someone using checks on your account. This could be from stealing your checkbook or electronically obtaining access to your checking account. Use of an ATM card or credit card that you did not approve is also identity theft.

In some cases, identity theft occurs within families to children, seniors, and domestic violence survivors, making reporting and recovery particularly difficult.

How Might it Impact Me?

Even if you are able to resolve a financial identity theft issue with your bank, this use of your name and credit history can result in other problems. You could get collection letters for things you did not purchase.

It can also result in negative entries on your credit report, causing you problems in getting credit or paying a higher interest rate.

Becoming the victim of an identity theft can be a complex and frustrating time in your life.

What Can I Do?

The Federal Trade Commission has created letters (in this booklet) that consumers can use to let a debt collector or credit bureau know of the theft of your identity.

To use the letters, you must first report the crime of identity theft to the police. You do not need to know the name of the person who used your identity. You show the police the debt collection letters or other proof that you are the victim of this crime.

The three forms below use the FTC-created material.
